A Millian Heir Accepts the Wages of Sinn

In my dissertation I argue against the orthodox view of propositions being both the semantic content and the content of beliefs expressed by sentences. In particular, I argue that, with respect to proper names, Millianism is the correct account for their contribution to the semantic content expressed by sentences with proper names, but that their contribution to the content of beliefs is a mode of presentation associated with the name that may vary from context to context. I also develop a novel account of the truth-conditions of belief ascriptions whereby the relevance of the content of belief to the truth-value of belief ascriptions is incorporated as a parameter of evaluation of the sentence, rather than as part of their content, as it is typically conceived. I argue that my account of the truth-conditions of belief ascriptions offers a better solution to classical puzzles, like Frege's Puzzle, Mates's Problem, Kripke's puzzle about belief.
